Kryštof Brůha is an intermedia artist living and working in Prague. In his works he explores specific environments - from environmental to technological and virtual - focusing on their influences and their overall transformation over time. He allows us to look at phenomena hidden from our perception, for example through macro and micro mapping of the environment, and through such scanning of space and time through artistic artefacts he offers the viewer a new view of reality.

The media are installation, kinetic sculpture, generative video and experimental film. Scientific methods, specifically designed algorithms, generative design and machine learning are used in the development process, while reverse engineering, Rapid Prototyping and CNC machines are used in the execution, which is reflected in the aesthetics of the works.
